

Race to the Oval Office

Are you ready to occupy the White House? What do you know about the government, elections, and history of the United States that would make you eligible to become the next president?

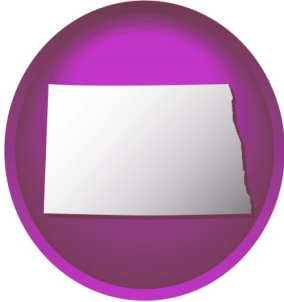

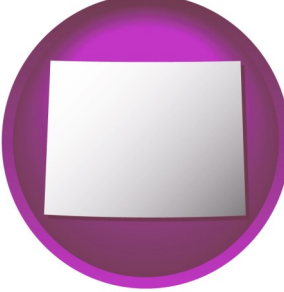

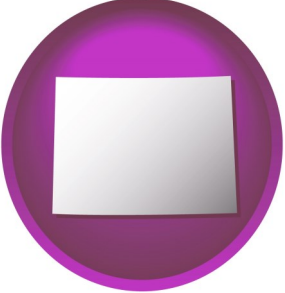

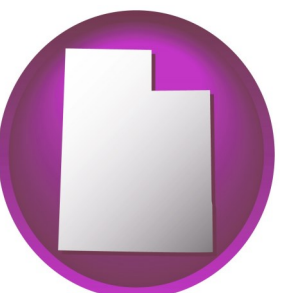

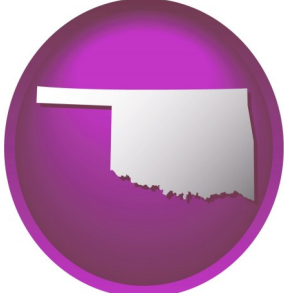

Preparing the Game:

1. Attach two file folders together by overlapping one side so you have three parts to glue the game board to. Attach the game board to the three parts of the file folders, matching the spaces on the board, trimming the pages if necessary to make them meet in the correct places.
2. Cut out the cards representing the individual states. These cards show a picture of the state, the abbreviation for the name of the state, and the number of electoral votes available if a player wins that state in the election.
3. Cut out the tokens needed to play the game. There are tokens with different colors of X's on them. Each player may choose a color for his campaign and take all the tokens of that color.
4. Cut out the question cards. If they are printed on cardstock or printed on paper and laminated, they will hold up longer, but they can be used just as easily if printed on regular copy paper.
5. Use one die and something such as beans or tokens from another game as markers.
6. Have some paper and a pencil handy for players to keep track of how many electoral votes each player has won as they campaign and try to win the election. Players can even have a small chalkboard or white board available to show each player's total electoral votes as they win elections. This will help each player see where the totals stand while they are trying to get enough electoral votes to win the game.

Playing the Game: (for two players)

1. Shuffle the question cards and place them in a stack beside the game board.
2. Each player puts a marker on start. Take turns rolling the die to see who is first. The player who rolls the highest number goes first.
3. The first player rolls the die to move. Players can move forward or backward, but not both in the same turn. Players must move the full amount of the spaces rolled. When a player lands on a state, he has to give his campaign speech (answer a question). The other player draws a card from the top of the pile of question cards and asks the question to the first player. If the first player gets the answer correct, he wins the electoral votes for that state and puts one of his tokens (square with an X on it) on the space to show that the state has been won. He takes the card that represents that state and writes down the number of votes he has won. Keep a running total of votes as players win states so that players will know when someone has enough electoral votes to win the game.
4. The next player rolls the die and moves, playing in the same way as the first player. If the second player lands on a state that has not been taken, she follows the same directions as the previous player and play continues. If she lands on a state that has already been won, she does
