In 1607, new settlers
founded the colony
of Jamestown
in Virginia.

They arrived on three ships, one of which was named the Susan Constant.

Native Americans
led by a chief named Powhatan
already lived there.

The colonists built a fort to protect themselves against the dangers found in a new land.

They wore helmets
and used weapons
like rifles.

They built homes, but many of the people
got sick and died
during the first year.

Captain John Smith
encouraged everyone
to work hard to create things they could sell in England.

Pocahontas was the chief's daughter. She visited often because the chief and John Smith were friends.

Men hunted for food their families
could eat.

Women worked very hard to make homes
for their families.

They grew many things for food
and carried water
in buckets.

Later, Powhatan and his people tried to force the settlers to leave.

Pocahontas

eventually married

John Rolfe, one of the English settlers.

Pocahontas traveled to England with John Rolfe and their son.

Pocahontas met the king and the royal family.

She wanted to learn more about

England so she could tell her people.

Pocahontas died just before it was time to return to Virginia with her family. She was 22 years old.
