

Please note: There are thought to be more than 34,000 species of fish in the world. Some of the fish in this unit are specific, such as the Siamese fighting fish. Others are broad, such as trout. For types of fish where there is more than one species, the student may choose whichever species they like and should note the specific name on the sheet, such as adding it as a caption to their picture. There is also some overlap, as both perch and walleye (a type of perch) are included in the unit. In these situations, students should choose a different kind of perch to focus on when given the broad type.
